World's Leaders Shun Shah Rites But Nixon Goes to Cairo, Assails U.S. Treatment of Former Ally

By Edward Cody

CAIRO, July 28 (WP) — President Anwar Sadat today organized a state funeral for the late Shah of Iran, a move that drew sharp criticism from the world's leaders. The funeral, which was held in the city of Cairo, was a stark contrast to the treatment of the late Shah in the United States, where he was widely regarded as a traitor.

Sadat's decision to bury the Shah in Cairo, with full pomp and circumstance, was a clear statement of his support for the Iranian revolution. The funeral was held in the city of Cairo, and was attended by a large number of Iranian officials and supporters.

Former Greek King Constantine II, who was exiled from Greece in 1974, was also present at the funeral. He was accompanied by his wife, Queen Anne-Marie, and their children. The King of Morocco, Hassan II, was also present at the funeral.

Air, Ground Offensive Russians Said to Battle Afghan Army Mutiny

By Stuart Auerbach

NEW DELHI, July 28 (WP) — The Russians have launched their largest land and air offensive since intervening in Afghanistan in late December, apparently to crush a revolt in an Afghan Army division that has mutinied, according to diplomatic reports reaching here today.

One report said Soviet helicopter gunships, MIG fighters and troop transport helicopters have filled the skies over the Afghan capital of Kabul every day since Friday. A report from a second area specialist called the Soviet air movements "the heaviest helicopter activity seen to date" and said, "It must represent a major action."

They agreed today that the helicopters and MIGs were heading southwest from Kabul toward Ghazni, where there are strong reports that the Afghan Army's heavily armed 14th Armored Division has mutinied.

There were also reports that the mutiny had spread to other units in the nearby garrison at Maidan Shahr. One source in Kabul told diplomats that Afghans there have besieged 200 Soviet tanks.

Dilemma for Strauss

West German Vote:
Tone Grows Vicious

By John Vinocur

MUNICH (NYT) — Although the big rallies and speeches are still more than a month away, the style and vocabulary of the West German election campaign has already become vicious.

Last week, a newly formed independent commission of official campaign referees issued its first decision — criticism of a caricature of the Christian Democratic candidate for chancellor, Franz Josef Strauss, in the Social Democratic Party weekly Vorwärts.

The panel said the cartoon, which showed Mr. Strauss as a ridiculous lion clomping on a piece of sausage while blood ran from his mouth and over his fangs, was a "breach in form and content of the basis of a fair and factual campaign."

But Mr. Strauss's Bavarian-based Christian Social Union has engaged in its share of mudslinging, attacking Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in a campaign film called "The End of a Legend."

The film hints that the chancellor's presence as an onlooker at a Nazi show trial when he was a young officer might not have been an accident despite Mr. Schmidt's assertion that he was forced to attend. It then goes on to portray some of the chancellor's best-known backers as former Nazis, narcotics users, friends of terrorists and passers of bad checks.

With an unflattering book on Mr. Schmidt ready for publication next month by Mr. Strauss's supporters, and a statement last week by the chairman of the German Writers Association, Bernd Engelmann, that Mr. Strauss was a Nazi and "is still a Nazi today," the campaign seemed likely to become inflamed.

Strauss's Dilemma

The vituperation clearly seems to favor the chancellor. The Social Democrats have long portrayed Mr. Strauss, an emotional, humorous and powerful speaker, as a man unable to control himself and therefore a threat to security.

Mr. Strauss has been left with a dilemma. If he does not respond to the attacks, he is accused by his own supporters of being listless, but if he rises to the bait offered him by hecklers, he seems to confirm the charge of recklessness.

So far the result has been a lead in the polls for Mr. Schmidt and his coalition of Social Democrats and Free Democrats. A survey published this week by one of the country's leading public opinion research groups showed the Social Democrats close to becoming the largest group in parliament and the Free Democratic Party no longer in danger of failing to get enough votes for representation in the election Oct. 5.

The vehemence of the attacks on

Mr. Strauss appears to have started to embarrass some Social Democrats, who may fear that the situation has gone too far.

A trace of this feeling has been apparent in the negative reaction to the statement by Mr. Engelmann, a Social Democrat and leading intellectual, that Mr. Strauss is a Nazi.

Mr. Engelmann acknowledges that Mr. Strauss was never a member of the Nazi Party, but he insists that his status at the end of the war as a morale officer was suspect. In addition, he has accused Mr. Strauss of using a fascist vocabulary.

The Nazi innuendo, angrily denied by the candidate, was only on the periphery of political speech-making until last weekend, when Wolfgang Luther, chairman of the West Berlin Free Democratic Party and the city's deputy mayor, said that a certain "Bavarian politician" talked like a Nazi. Mr. Strauss and his party called this base defamation, but Mr. Luther was defended by the Free Democrats' leadership.

Loss of Restraint

Accusations of "You're an old Nazi" or "an old Communist" can still cause a stir in West German politics. In the past, sensing their own potential vulnerability, both sides have generally appeared to want to avoid skirmishing in this area. But recent exchanges suggested that restraints are gone.

The film about Mr. Schmidt, which includes excerpts from the trial he attended, is the Strauss party's reaction to "Der Kandidat," a highly polemical film about the Bavarian leader. The Schmidt portrait, a less ambitious 35-minute television film, has not been shown publicly, but will be given out for election meetings.

The movie portrays Mr. Schmidt's rise as a politician, suggesting he cynically took advantage of a flood in Hamburg in 1962 to make a national impression.

The chancellor is described as a friend of millionaires and a man who is unconcerned about the effects of inflation.

Mr. Schmidt, the film asserts, is an accomplished actor who has mastered the role of the upright citizen. But the sound track urges voters to note who his most aggressive publicists are. It lists them as Rudolf Augstein, the publisher of the news magazine Der Spiegel, who it says was arrested for possession of narcotics (failing to mention that the charge was dropped); Henri Nannen, chief editor of Stern, a weekly magazine, who is shown in a Nazi uniform and is described as a former Nazi propagandist; and Mr. Engelmann, who is said to have passed bad checks.

delegation heads at a private dinner.

Mrs. Carter met privately with Mr. Belaunde yesterday, attended several receptions, and gave one herself for the U.S. community at Ambassador Harry Shlaudeman's residence.

She told her guests she did not know what effect the death of the deposed shah of Iran would have on the 52 American hostages in Iran. "I want you to know they are all ways on our minds and on the mind of the president," she said.

The ceremony had implications for the rest of Latin America, where military governments from Guatemala to Chile are under pressure to hold elections and return their countries to civilian rule.

The transfer of power may also be reflected in this fall's presidential race in the United States. The Republican platform and Ronald Reagan's foreign policy advisers are deeply critical of the Carter administration's policies of backing human rights and democracy in Latin America to the detriment of relations with the United States' military allies in countries such as Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay and Bolivia.

Mr. Carter's role as head of the U.S. delegation to the inauguration signified the importance that her husband's administration attaches to Peru's return to democracy, as do a $100-million U.S. aid program and Washington's recent help in persuading the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank to revise lending to the new government.

"I'd say we're immensely encouraged by what has happened here," Mr. Shlaudeman said.

Fernando Belaunde Terry

According to Manuel Ulloa, who will serve as Mr. Belaunde's premier and will direct the Finance and Economics Ministry, the new government will move quickly to increase employment and agricultural production, reduce the inflation rate, encourage foreign investment, inject private capital and competent management into the state-owned companies, restore freedom of the press by returning the newspapers to their former owners, and try to end corruption in government.

"We've got to be forceful," he said. "We've got to exercise authority and not dilly-dally. The people understood that they had to give us — and they gave us — a clear majority in order to govern."

Rival Iranian Protesters
Clash in U.S.; 35 Injured

By Donald P. Baker

WASHINGTON, July 28 (WP) — Rival Iranian demonstrators, many chanting slogans and waving banners and some wielding sticks, clashed with each other and with police in a series of skirmishes yesterday on the streets of downtown Washington.

By the time the series of rallies ended in the late afternoon, more than 35 persons — including two police officers — had been treated for injuries, mostly minor, and 110 persons had been arrested. Traffic was periodically disrupted as police chased protesters on foot, scooter and horse.

The four separate groups attracted a total of about 1,500 demonstrators. To add to the mix of conflicting ideologies and police-demonstrator clashes, scores of American tourists, servicemen and other bystanders jeered the Iranians and occasionally fought with them in the streets.

The focus of the day's activities was a rally in Lafayette Square sponsored by the Iran Freedom Foundation, whose founder, exiled Iranian diplomat Ali Akbar Tabataba'i, was assassinated last Tuesday in the doorway of his suburban Bethesda, Md., home.

Among the 400 people who attended the rally were some who lamented the death of the deposed shah. But the foundation supporters, who unanimously denounced the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, were outnumbered by three pro-Khomeini and Marxist groups, whose 1,100 followers taunted them from nearby streets and sidewalks and occasionally made forays into their midst, setting off free-for-alls.

About 100 arrests were made on the lawn of the Capitol Hilton Hotel, which became a refuge for several hundred pro-Khomeini Muslim students who had been routed from nearby Lafayette Square by police to make room for the anti-Khomeini rally.

Tabataba'i Associates

Two persons closely associated with Tabataba'i also figured in confrontations. The slain man's twin brother, Mohammed Tabataba'i, was grazed with a stick while making a speech, and a witness to the killing, Seyyed Ali Mortazavi, 29, was arrested on a charge of carrying a pistol without a license.

As police frisked Mr. Mortazavi and confiscated his gun, which he had flashed at a passerby, he pleaded, "I'm a target for Nationalist people." Bahram Nakhidian, a Georgetown rug merchant, is viewed by many Iranians in Washington as an unofficial representative of the Khomeini regime.

Mr. Mortazavi, a graduate archeology student at Temple University in Philadelphia, was released from jail after posting $1,000 bond. Throughout the afternoon, passersby taunted the demonstrators, shouting, "Go home," and "Stars and Stripes forever." Several youths waved a cardboard placard that said, "Down with the Ayatollah."

The ugliest skirmish occurred near the White House when a dozen Khomeini supporters encountered an equal number of U.S. Army enlisted men on leave from Fort Knox, Ky. A scuffle ensued over a U.S. flag that was being carried on a pole by one of the soldiers. A Khomeini loyalist grabbed at the flag, and in the struggle, the flagpole snapped in two.

Belgium Names Arab In Grenade Attack

ANTWERP, Belgium, July 28 (UPI) — An Arab who threw two grenades into a tour group of teenagers here yesterday, killing a 15-year-old boy, was traveling on a false Moroccan passport, authorities said. The man identified himself to Belgian police as Abdel Wahid, a 25-year-old Syrian.

"I am a Palestinian," sources quoted him as saying. Hospital sources said another Jewish boy was critically injured with shrapnel lodged in his brain.

Politics, Not Shah,
Key to Hostage Crisis

By William Branigan

WASHINGTON, July 28 (WP) — The fate of the hostages has now become so deeply involved in Iran's internal power struggle that current efforts to form a new Cabinet in Tehran may have more effect on resolving the U.S.-Iranian crisis than did the death yesterday of Mohammed Reza Pahlavi in Cairo, State Department officials said.

These officials added that the formation of a new government under able current figure for his fortune has been disclosed.

The militants' original three demands for the release of the hostages were the shah's extradition for trial in Iran, the return of the imperial fortune and a U.S. apology for alleged crimes in Iran.

There have been strong indications from the beginning of the siege of the U.S. Embassy, however, that the militants' objectives were far broader than the shah's extradition. Their targets have appeared all along to include the moderate secular politicians who headed the first revolutionary government under Ayatollah Khomeini, and any prospect of a renewed U.S. relationship with Iran.

The militants, fervent followers of Ayatollah Khomeini, share his view that U.S. influence in Iran must be wiped out before the Islamic republic can "purify" Iranian society. While seeking to sever relations with the United States and the West in general, the militants have promoted the idea of an Islamic cultural revolution that would reject both capitalism and Communism.

They have been sufficiently successful to be able now to ignore the shah's death and to continue to resist any U.S.-Iranian agreement to free the hostages, in the view of a number of U.S. experts on Iran. The militants are likely now to push for parliamentary endorsement of a hostage trial to condemn the United States.

State Department officials appear at the moment to be watching the formation of a new government under Mr. Bani-Sadr as an opportunity to seek resolution of the hostage problem.

Relative Independence

Mostafa Mir-Salim, 33, a French-trained engineer serving as Iran's national police chief and deputy interior minister, was nominated as premier Saturday by Mr. Bani-Sadr in an apparent compromise with the hard-line Islamic Republican Party. Though he is a member of the party's central council, Mr. Mir-Salim is considered a relative independent.

A test of the new government's political colors will come when a Cabinet is chosen and presented to the Majlis (parliament) for a vote of confidence within the next few days.

"Once the new government is chosen, obviously we are going to try to establish some kind of contact with it and to get the hostage trial moving along," a State Department official said yesterday.

The shah's death seems unlikely to deter the Iranian exile groups opposing the Islamic republic. The immediately stated willingness of the royal family to have the shah's eldest son, Crown Prince Cyrus Reza, proclaimed the new shah suggested that the struggle to overthrow Ayatollah Khomeini will continue, and that it will continue to be divided.

The exile groups have been divided among those still supporting the monarchy and those, such as the group led by former Premier Shahpur Bakhtiar, that seek on their own to replace the ayatollah. The United States has tried to avoid any public connection with the exile groups, a policy that is likely to continue.

Israelis, Palestinians
Protest Negev Prison

JERUSALEM, July 28 (UPI) — About 75 shouting Israeli leftists and Palestinians staged a peaceful demonstration yesterday in a protest against the Nafta Prison in the Negev Desert.

The 74 Palestinians held at the prison began a hunger strike on July 13 to demand an improvement in what they called inhuman conditions. Two of them died last week after Israeli authorities reportedly attempted force-feeding.

Holy Month Halts Much of Economy

By Edward Cody

CAIRO, July 28 (WP) — Dusk replaced the day's white heat with a tepid glow and Cairo's dim faded into an expectant silence as Amu Faud sat poised over his street-side dinner table, awaiting the chants from a dozen mosques that would signal that the sun had finally set.

Across the city millions of Egyptians were sitting like Mr. Faud, at the ready for their first food and drink since the dawn 15 hours earlier.

Bureaucrats' families gathered around apartment dining tables. Policemen sat around tin plates brought by their wives to street corners. The rich poured fruit juice to ready their shrunk stomachs for an all-night feast, and the poor prepared beans, as they squatted in the dusk.

When the cannon boomed and muezineen cried, "God is great" from their minarets, the entire city seemed to bend its head toward a plate. Normally clogged streets were empty. Telephone lines suddenly were free.

Shops and offices had cleared and the calm that settled on this noisy city of 10 million was so complete that, after the first gulps had gone down, table talk was clearly audible in streets where pedestrians were empty. Telephone lines suddenly were free.

Holy Month

Ramadan, the sacred Moslem month of fasting and prayer, which is now in its second week, has taken over Cairo and the Middle East. The holy period — the ninth month of the lunar calendar, when the angel Gabriel revealed the Koran to Mohammed in a cave near Mecca — is an annual feast reminiscent of Christmas and New Year's in the Christian world.

But it lasts an entire month and with its obligatory fasting brings much of the region's economic and official activity to a near halt. Islamic law says that all able Moslems must abstain from food, drink, sex, tobacco and evil from dawn to sunset during Ramadan.

The original idea was mortification of the flesh and exaltation of the soul. But the modern result is that many Moslems stay up most of the night eating and drinking, checking into the office for a few hours in the late morning and sleeping away the afternoon until, like Amu Faud, he can eat again in good conscience.

The season does, however, include increased piety. The Egyptian government has expanded the six-hour time allotted to Koranic readings on television and set up a gaudily lighted tent where famous sheikhs preach nightly sermons.

Food for the Poor

Two brothers who own a successful antique business, Ali Ahmed and Hassan Ahmed, feed between 150 and 200 poor people every evening at a twilight breakfast on the sidewalk in front of their store. The gesture is a long Ramadan tradition in the family.

"We do it because of Allah," Ali Ahmed said recently as about 30 men sat eating at a table and their

Britain, Saudi Arabia Mend Diplomatic Rift

LONDON, July 28 (AP) — Britain announced today that it would resume normal diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia, apparently ending a three-month rift over the British television film "Death of a Princess."

The announcement followed a three-day visit to Saudi Arabia by U.K. Ambassador James Craig, who was asked to leave Saudi Arabia shortly after the film was aired, would return to Jidda.

The controversial film, subsequently shown in the United States East and Europe, was a dramatization of the story of the public execution of Saudi Princess Mish'al and her lover, who were accused of adultery.

Violence Flares in Strike in Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG, July 28 (UPI) — Sporadic violence flared here today in a strike by more than 3,000 black municipal workers, mostly sweepers and garbage collectors, who are demanding higher wages.

Police said angry strikers trying to stop workers from coming to their jobs stabbed a black bus driver, while others stabbed and beat a traffic inspector. Neither man was hurt seriously.

The strike was triggered by the firing last week of 1,400 municipal plant workers after they walked off the job. They demanded a pay increase from $42.90 to $75.40 a week.

New Hebrides to Send Force to Restive Isla

PORT VILA, New Hebrides, July 28 (UPI) — New Hebrides authorities prepared to send police and officials to the island of Espiritu Santo in a showdown with secessionist rebels just before the nation gains independence.

A government spokesman said the contingent will be airlifted to a troubled island tomorrow. France and Britain, who have ruled the Hebrides together for 74 years, sent a joint force of 200 troops last week to end a two-month rebellion by secessionists led by Jimmy Stevens, however, have stayed in Espiritu Santo and have not moved to the rebels.

The government spokesman said the Anglo-French move was a "toxic exercise." He warned that the government will solve the impasse its own way when the archipelago becomes independent Wednesday.

10,000 Russians Mourn Balladeer Vysotsky

MOSCOW, July 28 (AP) — Some 10,000 Russians turned out today to weep and throw flowers, for the funeral procession of poet balladeer and actor Vladimir Vysotsky.

The spontaneous demonstration of emotion was unlike anything Moscow has seen in years. As the cortege moved from the Taganka Theatre, Vysotsky had starred as Hamlet and in other roles, several hundred broke through a police line and ran after the procession, waving signs. "This is not a political demonstration. We loved him," a young man in the crowd said.

Vysotsky, 48, was reported Friday to have died of a heart attack, survived by his wife, French actress Marina Vlady.

Russia Reported Battling

have set up strong roadblocks on all major highways leading out of Kabul.

At a key junction, diplomats counted four self-propelled guns, four armored cars, two light tanks and two armored scout cars. Many of those mobile armored vehicles have been imported in the past month to replace more cumbersome weapons unsuited for fighting in Afghanistan's mountainous terrain.

Significantly, an analyst said, the Soviet armor is positioned to repel attacks from all directions — not just ones coming from outside Kabul.

There were also reports of heavy fighting Saturday night in a residential area in the southwest quarter of Kabul. According to the diplomatic reports, the fighting lasted for 45 minutes to an hour, during which flares and tracer shells could clearly be seen.

There was no indication of what the fighting was about.

The blood feud between the two factions of the ruling Marxist People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, however, was reported to be continuing in Kabul and through the rest of the country.

This feud was blamed for the mutiny of the 14th Armored Division, one of the strongest among the decimated Afghan Army. It is equipped with tanks, artillery, anti-aircraft guns and possibly SAM missiles, all of which would be useful to rebel forces who have been battling both the Russians and the government for more than a year.

According to a non-diplomatic traveler reaching here over the weekend, the mutiny started when the Karmal government tried to replace the 14th Division commander, in an extremely difficult post and probably show that the press for Jaleddin Farsi, was regarded as less moderate.

Demotors outside the yesterday demanded the appointment of Mr. Farsi.

In other developments, a Karmal spokesman said that his Tehran home yesterday responsibility was claimed by who said he represents a group indicated to wiping out prominent members of the religious establishment. The group, which several prominent victims last was believed to have been slain after the arrest of 50 people in a city and the execution later of than a dozen.

The Vatican announced Archbishop Hilarión Capovilla has been acting as a special envoy on the future of Roman Catholic schools, with a view to their closure in the near future.

The U.S. Geological Survey said the quake was centered 50 miles northeast of Lima. "It was a good-size earthquake that area," a spokesman said.

It was the first earthquake record in the Kenrick area. It was extended into Illinois and as far east as Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina, and north to southern Ontario in Canada.

Summer Hiatus in De Broglie Affair

French Take Slow Road on 'Watergates'

By Richard Eder

PARIS (NYT) — If the French, and large, make it almost a matter of principle not to understand a scandal, a Bert Lance affair or a Watergate, it is because such things are managed differently here. In a political affair in France tends to come to a head. It surfaces, almost everything else, it goes on. For the last four years, police, judges, journalists and politicians have pursued an investigation into the murder of Jean de Broglie, a prominent political figure and an intimate associate of President Giscard d'Estaing. The pursuit has been at the gait of the local hunters: leisurely and sporadic with periodic bursts of activity. The most recent burst seems to have culminated last Wednesday in the appearance before a committee of Parliament of Michel Poniatowski, who was minister of the interior at the time of de Broglie's death and one of Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's intimate advisers. Mr. Poniatowski, who has left the government, has been accused of failing to follow police warnings that de Broglie's murder was being plotted.

'Which Hunt'

Mr. Poniatowski, who has dismissed a large public contempt for the investigation, termed it a political hunt, reiterated to the commission Wednesday his contention that the police warnings were at a level and had never reached. Upon which the commission, he wound up its work, as the government hoped it would, not until October.

The various investigations into the affair, beside Parliament's hurried effort, have provided evidence of a cover-up of some dimensions. Just what is being covered up is not clear.

A fairly senior police official has stated that he received warnings that subordinates of a plot to kill de Broglie, whose last years were marked by dubious financial dealings and connections with the underworld. The official said he dismissed these as farfetched and also paid no attention to a wiretap on one of the gangsters involved in the plot, even though the gangster spoke of a contract on de Broglie.

The police official said, with what has been taken as an excessive show of naivete, that "contract" could have referred to a normal commercial dealing. He also said that he had not passed the information on to his superiors. At the same time he suggested that at a high-level meeting four days after the murder

Israel Protests France's Atomic Supplies to Iraq

JERUSALEM, July 28 (UPI) — Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir expressed Israel's "grave concern" today over France's agreement to supply Iraq with uranium. He said that this could lead to another Middle East war, a communique reported.

In a meeting with France's charge d'affaires in Israel, Mr. Shamir stressed "the danger inherent in the creation of an Iraqi nuclear potential liable to be utilized in war," the government communique said.

Mr. Shamir protested France's supplying Iraq with a nuclear reactor, weapons-grade enriched nuclear fuel and "the scientific, technological nuclear know-how for creating a nuclear potential that may be put to military use."

France has defended its decision to supply Iraq with the reactor and uranium, saying that the necessary safeguards are being taken to prevent the nuclear capability from being put to military use.

But Mr. Shamir, expressing Israel's "grave concern," said that the "aid is liable to reignite the flames of conflict in the region and to put to naught the efforts to reach a peace settlement."

that his superiors, including Mr. Poniatowski, seemed to know about it.

The contradictory statements have raised all kinds of suspicions. They include a question that forms part of Parliament's investigation: whether Mr. Poniatowski knew about a planned murder and for some undefined reason — it is suggested that de Broglie's dealings were embarrassing to members of the government — failed to act. Short of this is the question of who or what is being protected by the changeable memories of some witnesses.

Mr. Poniatowski has taken the offensive, charging that he is being used as a political club to beat the government.

Accordingly, Thursday morning's issue of Le Figaro, which supports the government fairly faithfully, contained a cartoon showing Mr. Poniatowski as a very large knight on horseback preparing to enter a very small committee room in Parliament, Le Monde, which tends to be independent, printed a cartoon that was considerably more skeptical. It showed a very large elephant — Mr. Poniatowski is large and vociferous — leaving a china shop in which every dish and vase was intact.

The suggestion was that nothing had been cleared up or probably ever would be — that in the high politics of post-Gaullist France the china never really gets broken.

The disclosure of other things in the past — a gift of diamonds to the president by Jean Bedel Bokassa, then the Central African emperor, for example — has aroused interest but has had no real political consequences.

It is not that the press is shackled in France or that corruption is widely practiced. It is that within limits, at least, it is taken for granted that the exercise of power involves a measure of dirty work and a measure of personal favor.

It is taken for granted that those who run the state will try, again within limits, to keep secret a great deal of what they do. And that the press will try, still again within limits, to uncover some of it. And that if it is uncovered it will tend to lie there, at least until after the summer.

Left-Ruled City Has Tradition of Political Shifts

Mussolini's Political Heirs Gain Support in Naples Vote

By Sari Gilbert

ROME (WP) — After years of government by the center and then by the left, profound frustration in Naples — often called "the Calcutta of Italy" — has produced a sharp political turn to the right.

In last month's local elections there, the Italian Social Movement, political heir to fascist dictator Benito Mussolini, won a startling 22.3 percent of the city's vote.

Neapolitans have a tradition of hero worship and extreme voting shifts. In the 1950s and 1960s, the man on the white horse was shipping magnate Achille Lauro, a monarchist. Later, the city's major political leader was Christian Democrat Antonio Gava. In 1975, hopes for a change led to a massive vote for the Communists and Mayor Maurizio Valenzi.

This year a large number of Neapolitans expressed dissatisfaction with both the Christian Democrats and the Communists by turning to the neo-fascists, who nationally poll less than 6 percent. A highly personal campaign led to a victory for party leader Giorgio Almirante.

The Communists, who rule locally, sought to counter the neo-fascist appeal with posters showing the late Neapolitan comedian, Totò, winking over a caption reading "Almirante for mayor. Have we all gone crazy?"

Elections left the Communists still in the No. 1 spot. But Mr. Almirante polled the highest number — 118,000 — of preferential votes in a parliamentary system where voters first choose a party and then a particular candidate.

The neo-fascist campaign played up the fact that after five years of Communist rule, Naples still has 150,000 unemployed, several thousand homeless, an infant mortality rate of 27 for every 1,000 births, inadequate sanitation and social services, severe traffic problems and crowding that gives each resident only 40 square inches of park area.

Traditionally Naples and the Italian south have been something of a neo-fascist stronghold, but according to Mr. Almirante, his Naples voters included non-fascists weary of Italy's other political groups. In 1972, widespread political disillusionment, concern over a fading economic boom and explosive social problems in the Italian south combined to give the party almost 9 percent of the national vote. In last year's general elections, it won 5.9 percent, with 31 seats in the Chamber of Deputies and 13 in the Senate.

The 2 million Italians who voted for the neo-fascists in 1979 appear to include members of families with direct connections to the Mussolini regime as well as people who believe the party is sincerely dedicated to a third way between Communism and Italian democracy.

According to Mr. Almirante, 66, a controversial figure who makes no bones about his fascist past, the party's long-term goal is a new republic that would reflect and synthesize the values of state, society and nation. The neo-fascists' Italy would be one with a directly elected president responsible to a parliament organized along trade or corporate lines.

The neo-fascists in Naples claim they have become the arbiters of the city's political situation. But neither the reconfiguration of the city's present minority four-party coalition headed by the Communists or a broader coalition under a non-Communist mayor appear to be the role for the inheritors of Mussolini's mantle.

But in this sense the neo-fascists may have been lucky. Recently a top Neapolitan Communist described governing Naples as the toils of Sisyphus, the ancient Greek king condemned in hell to forever roll a giant stone uphill only to watch it roll down again.

Joaquin Garrigues Walker, Spanish Politician, Dies

MADRID, July 28 (UPI) — Joaquin Garrigues Walker, 46, Spain's most prominent liberal and a member of two post-Franco Cabinets, died at a Madrid hospital early today after a two-year fight against leukemia.

The son of Antonio Garrigues y Diaz-Canabate, a former Spanish ambassador to Washington and the Vatican, Mr. Garrigues Walker joined Premier Adolfo Suarez's Union of the Democratic Center on its formation in 1977.

In the same year he was elected a deputy for Madrid in Spain's first general elections since the death of Franco and received his first government portfolio as minister of public works.

He resigned from the government during a shake-up three months ago, citing ill health.

Known for his irreverent and ironic sense of humor, Mr. Garrigues Walker became increasingly critical of Mr. Suarez and had begun to emerge as a possible successor to him when he was first hospitalized with a cancerous spleen in March, 1979.

Mr. Garrigues Walker was related to the Rockefeller family through his mother.

The Visa name is on these travellers cheques because thousands of millions in banking assets stand behind them.

The financial system behind the Visa card is the largest in the world with over 12,000 members in 110 countries. Now, Visa Travellers Cheques are being issued by financial institutions worldwide. These include Barclays Bank International, Standard Chartered Bank, Chase Manhattan Bank, First Chicago Cheque Corporation, Banco Atlantico, The Sumitomo Bank, Ltd., and many others.

The combined financial strength of these issuers far surpasses that of any individual financial institution in the world — or any single travellers cheque issuer in the world — and this financial strength stands behind every Visa Travellers Cheque sold.

Thousands of other financial institutions are operating as sales locations and, as with the Visa card, a participating institution's name may be printed across the top of the cheque.

Visa Travellers Cheques are presently being sold in four major currencies: the U.S. Dollar, the Pound Sterling, the Japanese Yen, and the Spanish Peseta. Cheques in additional currencies are being developed to facilitate the travel needs of people throughout the world.

For years, banks and merchants have relied on the strength and integrity of the Visa name for proven worldwide financial services.

Loophole in Akron Municipal Law Found Big Enough to Keep a Lion

AKRON, Ohio, July 28 (AP) — In Akron, it's against the law to raise a rabbit, keep a cow or have a hog. But housing lions? Well, that's a horse of a different color.

Michael McCann recently purchased Timba, an 11-month-old, 250-pound lion, and despite calls from Mr. McCann's worried neighbors, city health officials say that there is nothing they can do about it.

Municipal law makes it illegal to keep rabbits, cows or hogs within city limits, but there is no provision for lions. Health officials say that Mr. McCann needs only to ensure that Timba is not a nuisance or a safety threat.

Timba's home is a heavy steel cage at the rear of Mr. McCann's garage. For about an hour each day, Mr. McCann chains Timba to a tree in the backyard to let the lion catch some sun.

And Mr. McCann says that his pet is not ferocious, but "just a playful kitty cat."

GLADYS, DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH

By Hugh Vickers. Holt, Rinehart & Winston.

Illustrated. 336 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Richard Eder

BERNARD BERENSON was intrigued by Gladys Deacon, and she addressed him as "my faun," and called herself "your Maenad." Count von Keyserling, a philosophic luminary in his day but not much read in ours, wanted to be her husband. After divorcing Consuelo Vanderbilt, the Duke of Marlborough was married to Gladys for a while, until she began filling Blenheim Palace with mania and dozens of incontinent dogs. He walked out, taking with him the butler, the deputy butler, his valet, the chef and a kitchen maid. Gladys moved out, too, and for the next 45 years she lived as an eccentric recluse, dying in 1977 at the age of 96 in an asylum for the well-born demented.

All this suggests that the life of the ninth Marlborough's second duchess might be promising material for a book. But it isn't, really, or not on the evidence of Hugh Vickers' biography, "Gladys, Duchess of Marlborough." Vickers became fascinated by Gladys Deacon when he was 16 years old and read a memoir that described her appearance in a London shop, garishly painted and vacant-eyed. The image stayed with him, and eventually he pursued it to the asylum where he found her, at 95, with a cloth over her face. For the next two years, he visited her regularly, trying to stare her wandering mind and, at times, succeeding.

Vickers' theme is tragically lost grandeur, but his book rattles around inside it like two peas in a pod. His heroine was more pathetic than grand. She was beautiful when young, and possessed a coruscating temperament that frequently dazzled. After a while, however, she gave way to disarray. What the beau monde of London and Paris took casually for originality was a mind in incipient shards.

Gladys' parents were wealthy New Englanders with their own share of instability. They lived in France until her father, a moody, violent man, discovered a lover of his wife hiding behind her bedroom sofa. Deacon shot him dead. Gladys went to boarding schools, and then joined her mother, a promiscuous beauty who drifted between France and Italy, keeping an eye out for matches for her daughter.

Gladys had her own match in mind. At 14, at school in Newport, R.I., she had read about the marriage of her neighbor Consuelo, the Duke of Marlborough. It created an obsession in her. It was until she was 40, after a long liaison with Marlborough and his divorce from Consuelo, that she was married to him. The marriage lasted 3 years. The obsession expired more quickly, and there was nothing much left but her dogs and a bad temper.

It is a melancholy story, but Vickers has tried to inflate it into more than that. He speaks of her as a woman "of outstanding beauty, personality and intelligence, who dazzled society in Paris, Rome and London." But all he conveys is a few evanescent glints. There is a woman's putdown of Winston Churchill: "He just had a certain faculty for making a noise. That all. There are people who, through life bashing cymbals, was one, and Garibaldi was another." That is batty, but a touch peevish.

Most of the other quotations in Vickers' secured from Gladys range from banal to incoherent. Vickers drops names to suggest a whole world of grandeur, Rilke, Rodin, Manet, but many of these breathlessly scribed encounters remind one of the magnificently insane and "Lloyd George Knew My Father." Gladys was a tourist of celebrity.

An example of Vickers' inflated style is his account of the counter between Gladys and a German crown prince at a weekend house party. "Paris, newspapers subsequently wrote of it, moment of grand passion. The prince seems to agree, but he gives the evidence that it was much more than one of the prince's periodic isodes of being smitten. Still and the 48 hours in the country scene, need: 'Had the Kaiser permitted son to marry Gladys, the course 20th-century history might have been very different. Might it have been a German-American alliance in the Great War?'"

The author has worked hard to make a star of his infirm and occasional comers, and the effort in his "Gladys, Duchess of Marlborough" a considerable footnote.

LITTLE GLORIA . . . HAPPY AT LAST

By Barbara Goldsmith. Knopf. Illustrated. 650 pp. $15.95.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

THE title is ironic, of course. Barbara Goldsmith took it from the appeal brief filed by the winning team in the Gloria Vanderbilt custody case, in which the final section was headed, in a burst of Victorian sentiment: "LITTLE GLORIA . . . HAPPY AT LAST." No one got happy as a result of the case — not the judge, not the lawyers, not the press, not the public, not Little Gloria's mother or aunt, and especially not Little Gloria herself, who went right on leading the miserable life of the poor little rich girl that the custody trial was in principle supposed to put to an end.

Nor is a reader of Goldsmith's massive chronicle particularly sorry that things turn out so badly for everybody in the end — that the judge in the case went crazy, that the chief lawyer for the losing side died of a broken heart, that Little Gloria's mother, Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, went right on wilting and fading like the hothouse flower she always was, or that the opposing principal in the suit, Little Gloria's imperious Aunt Gertrude, withdrew into the cold-storage locker that was hidden behind her icy facade. The best of these characters fail to evoke much sympathy from a reader; the worst of them make conventional villains look like saints. And this lack of a single person with whom a reader can wholly sympathize is only one of the reasons for ignoring Goldsmith's history.

Yet one keeps on reading. One does so despite the fact that the author's prose rarely rises above the level of bright cliché — "To the end," Gertrude Whitney "would remain a finishing-school girl pouring tea at a holocaust" is among the book's crisper sentences — and occasionally descends to a level considerably more florid than that: "Inside his body," begins the chapter on Little Gloria's playboy father, Reginald Claypoole Vanderbilt, "lethal flakes of fat were coagulating into balls, choking the healthy cells of his liver. Every minute one and one-half quarts of blood fought to enter this purification chamber, only to find it necrotic, inflexible." Still, one keeps on reading. One keeps reading because the false illusion of narrative development that Goldsmith creates. Long passages that focus on Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt's "condition" as Little Gloria's mother in actuality are deep gossip — albeit very high-class gossip, having to do with the aristocratic Viscountess Thelma Furness, Gloria Vanderbilt's sister, and no less a personage as Edward, Prince of Wales — only a tangential bearing on the case. In any case these gossipous make it look as though we have been told a great deal about Little Gloria's mother, when in fact we have learned practically nothing at all. And still one keeps reading.

Why did I keep reading? For one thing, Goldsmith, who is a founder of New York magazine, the author of the novel, "The Man," has developed Little Gloria case very skillfully. By leading her book with two chapters in which she diametrically opposed points of view, she fills us with curiosity over who was in the right. Then, developing the two points of view, she never allows our own prejudices to shift too far to one side. And, not incidentally, she offers a plausible solution to the mystery of why Little Gloria, dear her obvious devotion to her mother, was so frightened of returning her custody. Goldsmith believes that Little Gloria was simply befuddled by kidnapping and the death would surely lead to.

But more important, "Little Gloria" adds up to an unusually portrait of American society during the first four decades of the 20th century. Still, if "Little Gloria" is void in its social history, it is also void in feeling uncomfortable. The book that generates enormous momentum, but because of the need of the characters and the sly way Goldsmith sometimes plucks them, it leaves one asking for having been sucked along.

Mennea Wins 200 Meters; Long Jumper Hits 28 Feet

From Agency Dispatches
MOSCOW, July 28 — Pietro Mennea of Italy, past champion of the 200-meter dash, won the 200-meter dash today at the Summer Olympics, while Lutz Dombrowski of East Germany became only the second long jumper in history to clear 28 feet.

Mennea, who reluctantly came to Moscow for the 1980 Summer Games — he was a favorite of boycotting because of the Soviet Union's military intervention in Afghanistan — overcame a strong field to win the 200-meter dash in 20.21 seconds. The winning time was a new world record.

Dombrowski, winner of the 100-meter dash, cleared 28 feet, 2 inches in his first jump, finishing second in his heat behind Eliahu Ben-Zion of Israel. The other heat was won by Markus Ryffel of Switzerland in 13.45 seconds.

Sergei Sukhoruchenkov of the Soviet Union won the men's Olympic individual road race cycling title in a time of 4 hours, 48 minutes, 28 seconds. The silver medal went to Czechoslovak's Ladislav Konecny, who finished with Yuri Barinov of the Soviet Union.

Falk Hoffmann of East Germany, one of the focal points in a controversy that marred the springboard diving competition last week, came back today to win the men's platform diving.

Hoffmann compiled 835.650 points to win the gold medal and beat two divers from the Soviet Union. Vladimir Aleinik won the silver with 819.705 and David Ambarsumyan captured the bronze with 817.440.

Hoffmann, who finished fourth in the springboard competition, was involved in a 2-pronged protest in that event. He requested to be allowed to repeat a dive because of the lighting conditions and was refused. But the first place finisher

Catching Up With Mike Kekich

By George Vecsey

MEXICO CITY (NYT) — "A lot of my friends," Mike Kekich relates with a laugh, "say, 'You? A doctor? There's no way you're ever touching my body.'"

He is sitting in his $9-a-day hotel room, taking notes on the cassette player, a copy of "Medical College Admission Test" open on a couch.

In his time, Mike Kekich was not the person you might expect to be studying medicine between pitching assignments. He was wild when he tried to locate home plate for the Dodgers and the Yankees, and he was wild away from the ball park — a human cannonball coming in for a landing.

But Mike Kekich, now a 35-year-old starter for Ciudad Juarez in the Mexican League, has always been a seeker, and his quest has led him to Universidad Autonoma de Ciudad Juarez, Instituto de Ciencias y Biomedicas. He will end classes when the Mexican baseball season, truncated by a strike of 14 of the 20 teams, ends in mid-August.

True to his calling as one of the world's mavericks, Mike Kekich dreams of practicing in some small town for a few dollars or a few pesos, "doing what the people need."

Even if he makes it through five years of medical school, Kekich will not be the first baseball player to become a doctor. Bobby Brown, now a heart specialist in Dallas, attended medical school while playing for the Yankees in the 1940s. George Medich of the Texas Rangers is close to validating his nickname, "Doc." And Ron Taylor, now the team physician for the Toronto Blue Jays, went directly from the bull pen to the labs and the classrooms.

Others Called Doc

But it is fair to say that not one of them was so much of a baseball flake as Mike Kekich, who started as a raw bonus baby from Montana at a time when he could throw a baseball nearly as hard as Sandy Koufax. When the Dodgers traded Kekich to the Yankees after the 1968 season, a Los Angeles reporter casually said, "Oh, you guys are going to love Crazy Kekich." An official of the Yankees raised his eyebrows. Crazy Kekich? They hadn't known.

"A lot of guys were only interested in three things: home, ball park, bank," Kekich says in his deep, intense voice. "I always wanted to go places, to talk to people."

With the Yankees, Kekich carried a tennis racket on road trips. It didn't matter that he played right-handed; the racket branded him as different. Beyond that, he helped raise clubhouse pranks to nearly nuclear-war level.

Wife Swapper

Then, in early 1973, Kekich and Fritz Peterson, another Yankee left-hander, disclosed that they had "switched wives," as the headlines put it. (Why couldn't the headlines say that the women had "switched husbands," which was equally true?) The ensuing scandal, yet, when Kekich beat the Mexico City Tigers last week, the fine new journal Uno Mas Uno could not resist noting that this was the same Mike Kekich who...

"Everybody asks me about that," Kekich says, "and I tell them it was just one part of my life. They always look it out of proportion."

Fritz Peterson and Susan Kekich, married for several years, now live in the Chicago area, where Peterson is an evangelist. Mike Kekich and Marilyn Peterson did not stay together long, as he continued his baseball odyssey.

"In 1974, I played in Japan," Kekich recalls. "I bought a little car and drove all over the country, half way up Mount Fuji. Learned around 150 words of Japanese, loved to talk to people. I played for Billy Martin in Texas in 1975. Had the best record in spring training, and he [Martin] told two reporters, 'I'm going to run that s.o.b. out of baseball.' I think he held that Yankee thing against me."

Three Feet in Casket

In 1976, Kekich pitched summer ball in Mexico and winter ball in Venezuela, where he nearly died after having been punched in the spleen while intervening in a fight.

"Aw, that's an old story by now," Kekich says. "I almost died three times that year. Operation in Venezuela, stung by a bee and nearly had a heart attack, fell off my motorcycle on my way to spring training."

Phillies Top Braves, 17-4, As Maddox Bats In 5 Runs

PHILADELPHIA, July 28 (UPI) — Garry Maddox drove in five runs, three of them on a bases-loaded triple, and Steve Carlton earned his 16th victory today to pace the Philadelphia Phillies to a 17-4 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Maddox's triple highlighted a five-run second inning and Carlton, Lonnie Smith and Pete Rose singled to load the bases before Mike Maddox hit a two-run double off loser Rick Matula (6-9). After Mike Schmidt was intentionally walked, Preston Hanna replaced Matula and was greeted by Maddox's bases-clearing hit.

Carlton (16-5) allowed four hits over seven innings and struck out eight to win his major-league leading total of 181. He was touched for three runs in the second but pitched two-hit ball after that, while the Phillies pounded four pitchers for a season-high 21 hits.

Smith's second home run of the season and an RBI single by Maddox staked the Phillies to a 3-0 lead in the first but a run-scoring double by Bill Hanrahan and Larvell Blanks' sacrifice fly helped the Braves tie the score in the second.

Philadelphia added two runs in the fourth and three in the seventh when Maddox picked up his final RBI of the day on a sacrifice fly. Glenn Hubbard hit his fifth homer in the fifth for Atlanta.

Dodgers 3, Cubs 2

In Los Angeles, Rudy Law came home from third on Joe Ferguson's sacrifice fly to short right field in the 12th inning to lift Los Angeles over Chicago, 3-2. Law got a pinch single with one out in the 12th, stole second and continued to third on a throwing error by catcher Barry Foote. Ferguson followed with his fly ball, and Law beat Mike Vial's throw home.

Pirates 6, Giants 4

In San Francisco, two-run singles by Phil Garner and Tim Lincecum helped Jim Bibby notch his eighth straight victory and boost his season record to 13-1 as Pittsburgh beat San Francisco, 6-4. In the first inning, a two-out walk to Lee Lacy, Bill Madlock's single and Mike Essler's run-scoring single gave Pittsburgh a run off Bill Bordley (2-2), then Garner produced his two-run single for a 3-0 lead.

Reds 10, Mets 4

In New York, George Foster, Harry Spillman, Johnny Bench and Ron Oester drove in two runs each to carry Joe Price and Cincinnati to a 10-4 victory over New York. Oester singled for Cincinnati's first fly in the 13th inning scored Mickey Rivers from third base to carry Texas over Chicago, 4-3, for a doubleheader split. Bob Molinaro's tie-breaking double with two out in the sixth inning scored Greg Pryor from first and gave Steve Trout and Chicago the opener, 3-2.

Tigers 4, A's 2

In Detroit, Matt Keough pitched a two-hitter over 8½ innings and David Reardon drove in three runs with a single and triple to lift Oakland to a 4-0 victory over Detroit for a doubleheader split. Milt Wilcox pitched a five-hitter and John Wockenfuss and Duffy Dyer homered to lead Detroit to a 4-2 triumph in the opener.

How the Gimmick Bets Have Changed the Game

Looking at the Horse-Players Revolution

By Andrew Beyer

WASHINGTON (WP) — In the history of thoroughbred racing there have been two great revolutions in the way horse players bet. One occurred around the turn of the century, when on-course bookmakers began to be displaced by mutual machines, necessitating changes in the strategy of every gambler. The other began in the 1960s, when race tracks introduced what are called exotic or multiple or gimmick bets — wagers that involve more than one horse. The modern-day proliferation of bets like the exotic and the triple has fundamentally altered the nature of the game.

In every revolution, there is an old guard which cannot adapt to the changes and therefore denounces them. When New York belatedly abolished field bookies, journalist Tony Betts wrote, "I thought the professionals would swear off and start an organization named Horse Players Anonymous."

Many modern experts similarly derided the coming of exotic bets. Author Tom Ainslie, whose handicapping books have educated a generation of American horse players, denounces them in all their forms. "The daily double, exacta, perfecta, quinella, trifecta and similar parimutuel attractions are gambling, impure and simple," he wrote. "Moreover, they are forms of gambling without the slightest incentive for a competent player of horses. They are strictly sucker bait."

Even horseplayers who find the exotics irresistible share Ainslie's view in principle, believing that there is something impure and unprofessional about playing exotics and triples.

This opposition to the exotics is based on the assumption that the only way to play a race is to find the superior horse and bet him to win. It's hardly a crazy assumption; men have been betting thoroughbreds in this fashion since the middle of the 18th century. And that is why the exotics are truly revolutionary.

How, I wonder, would Ainslie and his brethren handle the following situations?

● A 3-to-5 shot looks unbeatable in a particular race, but his chief competition may come from a 30-to-1 shot with well-concealed virtues. Betting the long shot to win probably will be futile. Betting the favorite to win or the long shot to place won't produce adequate rewards. What do you do?

Moscow Residents Uncertain, Worried

By Anthony Austin

MOSCOW, July 28 (NYT) — The trolley bus pulled up at a stop and a middle-aged woman with a threadbare shopping bag got on. "So, comrades," she addressed the world from her seat, "the spies and diversions have already begun."

The others on the bus pretended not to hear. From the cloth bags of the women and the bulging briefcases of the men, it was clear that their minds were on the hurried shopping for provisions done on their lunch breaks.

"What, you don't know?" insisted the woman who had just gotten on. She recounted one of the warnings given in the lectures by Soviet security experts at all Moscow offices and factories in the weeks before the Games. This one had that CIA agents among the foreign tourists would order soft drinks in public cafes and cafeterias and leave the bottles half empty — after pouring in powdered poison.

"I've found one of those half-empty bottles already," the woman said triumphantly. "I took it to the militia."

All in the Face

The other passengers stared stonily ahead. When the woman got off at the next stop, some of them looked at each other half-smilingly. But there was something else in their faces, too — irritation, uncertainty, worry.

The episode conveyed something of the mood of Moscow. With their ponderous security precautions and warnings that hostile agents among the foreign tourists could be expected to do their worst, the authorities took the holiday atmosphere out of the Games.

There were warnings of sinister strangers who would try to slip poisoned chewing gum to children, stage hostile political demonstrations and perform other "dirty tricks."

A week has passed since the opening ceremony, and none of these terrible things has happened. The anxiety and tension that had been building up before the Olympics have been markedly on the wane since the Games began. The Muscovites who had retreated from the main streets to their little neighborhood pockets to be out of the path of the Olympic juggernaut have been trickling back in increasing numbers. Moscow is beginning to look like Moscow again — not the world's most beautiful capital, certainly, but interesting for the rough vitality of its street crowds.

The people are walking past the hotels, as they used to, eyeing the foreign tourists. The Soviet authorities turn aside questions on how many foreign tourists have actually arrived, but there are certainly far fewer than had been expected. One American tourist said: "There are so many unclaimed tickets for all the American tourists who didn't come that my wife and I have been having the choicest seats at all the sports events."

Every day at 1 p.m., Vladimir Popov, the tall, urbane Russian who is second in command on the Soviet Olympic organizing committee, sits down behind a long table and opens another round in a contest that is not found on any of the Olympic programs.

The daily match in the conference hall of the Olympic press center might be called fencing en masse, since the object of the two teams — Popov and a contingent of Communist journalists, and the correspondents of the capitalists — is to lunge and parry and score points.

Popov is out to get as many points as possible, with protective support from his teammates of the Soviet and East European press, before being tripped up by some outside question from the all-Western squad.

Thus, ever since these Olympic press briefings began last Monday, Popov has been starting off with an array of statistics demonstrating the Games' high athletic standards and broadly representative attendance.

He has been opening each press conference with a jubilant recapitulation of the gold medals won and the records set the day before — mostly Russians or East Germans — and an authoritative totting up of the aggregate number of spectators to date.

Western correspondents, who do not feel they need to be told of medal and record totals they had reported on the day before, come to these press conferences to try to get at the facts and figures behind the official glorification of the Moscow Games. Since information putting things in plain perspective is hard to come by in the Soviet Union, the briefings have acquired more of an adversarial relationship than either side probably expected.

A Dutch correspondent asked Popov why he had opened that day's press conference by congratulating the Vietnamese journalists, athletes and Olympic officials in Moscow for the launching of a Vietnamese astronaut into space as part of the Soviet space program. What relevance, the reporter asked, does that have to the Olympic Games?

Popov, who might have replied that both the Olympics and the launching of the Vietnamese astronaut were designed to enhance the prestige of the Soviet Union, especially in the third world, chose a more devious riposte that would probably have left him, in an impartial umpire's eyes, outscored for back-pedaling.

"For flights into space, one must be a superbly trained athlete," he said. "It is not by chance that in the Soviet Union all cosmonauts have acquired the title of Merited Master of Sports. That is why a flight into the cosmos is, to some extent, a sporting event."
